Ugly?

# goa diaries

nobody else has a body like yours

saw a girl with
a wild skull
bra... a little doped.

I still remeber her
polka dotted pantyhose.

I wont lie, I was a little high too that night....

Live
a good Story

HAVE YOU FELT A CONNECTION WITH SOMEONE ?
NOT IN LUST OR IN THEIR IMAGE,
BUT IN THE RICHNESS OF THEIR SOUL AND THE VIBES THEY GIVE OFF ?

SHORT INTRO OF BRA

The first bra, as we know it today, was a chance creation by a young Mary Phelps Jacob in the 19th century. The 19-year-old at the time was quite simply done with the gut-wrenching, back-breaking corsets that the ladies of the age adorned, while they struggled to take a full breath in the wound-up, whalebone creation that would push up their breasts high enough to create a table for their cereal bowl (let's not pretend I'm the only one guilty of doing this).

She called for her maid to bring two handkerchiefs, some cord and pink ribbon. Stringing them all together - we can imagine what went where - she created for herself the first, simple bra. Non-restricting and smooth, she caught the attention of other women at the ball, soon people began asking for more, offering her money, and she knew she had stumbled upon a creation that could possibly transform the women's undergarment scene. She patented her product in 1914.

The very first reference to bras in Indian literature dates back to the rule of King Harshavardhana in the 7th century AD—more than a thousand years earlier!” stated Breakout Bras.

The kanchuka, a tight-fitted bodice, of sorts, made several appearances in the literature of the Vijayanagara empire of the 1300s - there were even special tailors called chippiga who specialised in bras and blouses. There were reference to bras in India in literature. “Of course, ancient Indians were no strangers to bras by the 1300s.

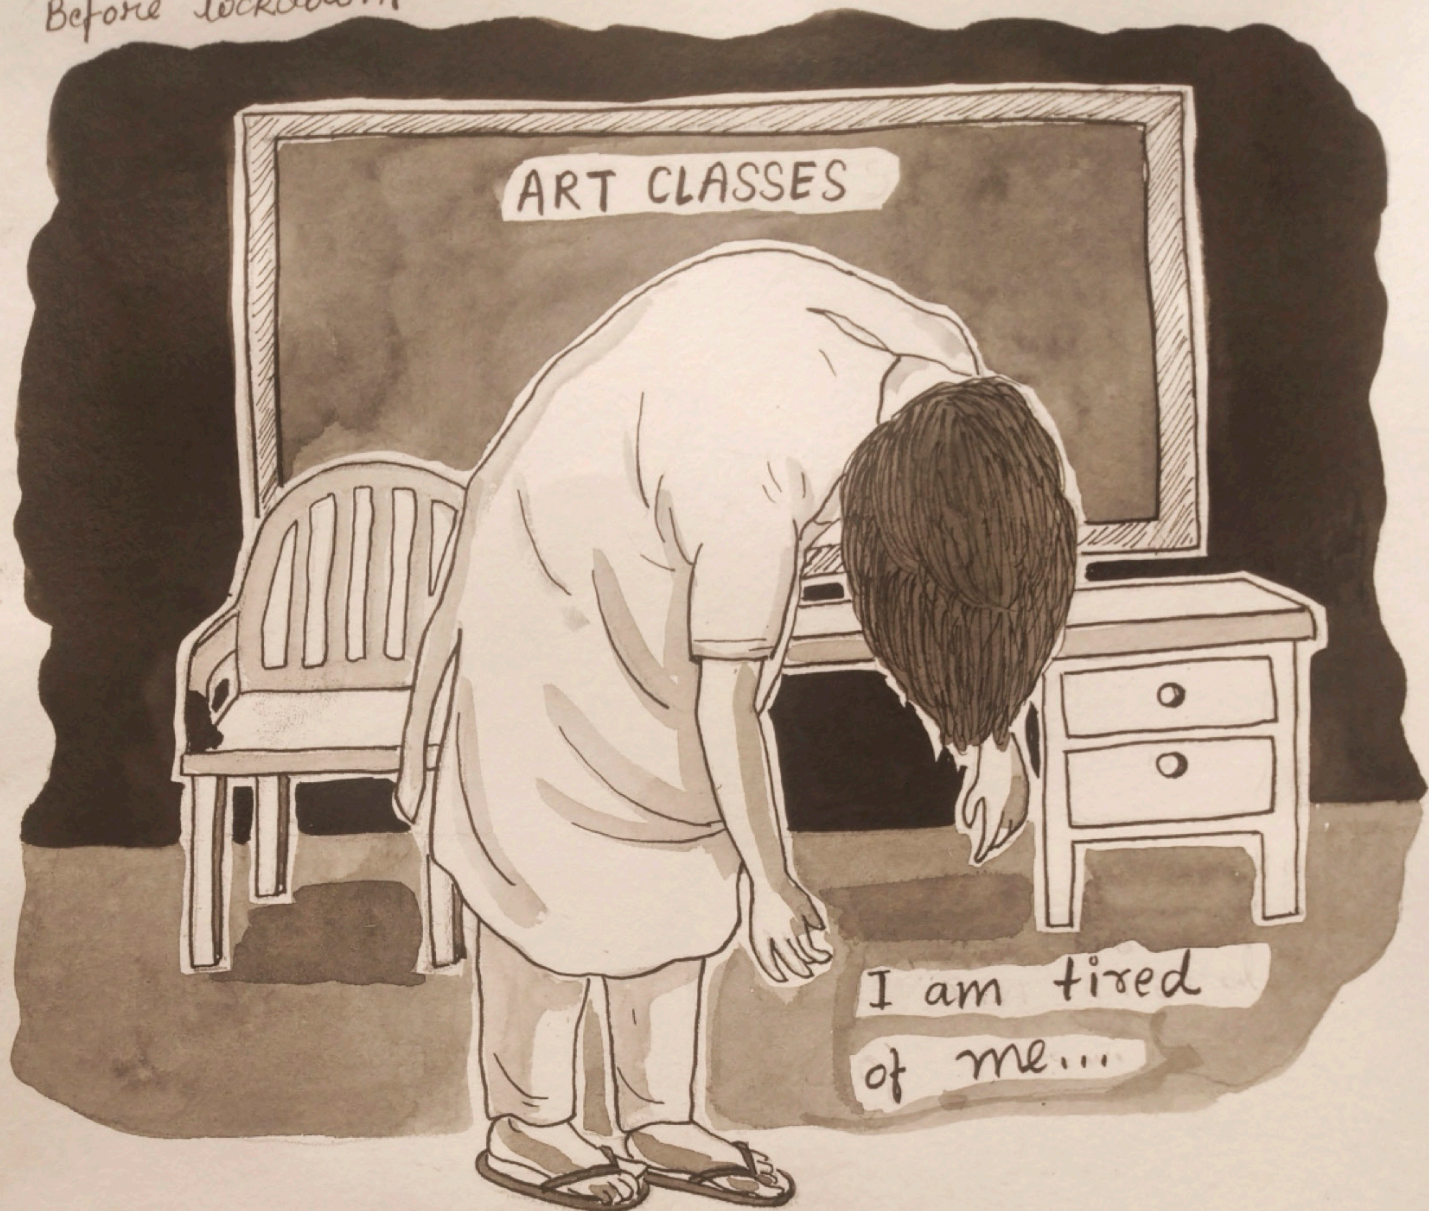

Can Something
Come From Nothing...!!

Before lockdown.

I am tired
of me...

Don't have time for me....

After lockdown.

May. June. July...

I should do some work
or work out or make something, instead of Just lying....

I have wasted
another day
DOING
nothing..

Aug, Sep, Oct...

I am tired of
me.

Don't have
time for me...

I have not done,
anything productive
even today.

I have wasted
another day doing
nothing...

I should do any
work or workout
or make something, instead
of just lying...

When I had no
time, I was thinking about work. Then I had all the time,
I wanted and,
nothing to do...
But by doing
nothing, I was doing something....
